

Julia Franks is the author of The Say So and Over the Plain Houses (Hub City Press), her debut novel which was listed among the NPR Best Books, included in many “best of” lists, and received five different prestigious literary prizes (The Townsend Prize, The Thomas Wolfe Award, The Southern Book Prize, Georgia Author of the Year, and The IPPY Gold). She has also published stories in The New York Times, Ms. Magazine, Lit Hub, and The Bitter Southerner, among other places. Her family has roots in the Southeast, though she was raised as an army “brat” and has lived in many places. For years she taught high school in the US and abroad. She and her husband now live in Atlanta and spend their free time hiking and kayaking in the Southeastern mountains.